CELEBRITY SEX TAPE$

THAT MADE US SIZZLE

By Sonya Carmack

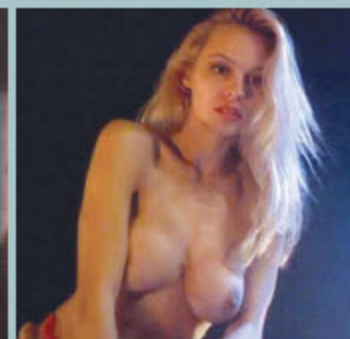

Why are sex tapes so appealing? Is it the sex itself? Is it the rare chance to see your favorite stars doing things they won't do on film? Or is it the thrill of seeing bad actresses and horrible singers nude—without having to watch them act or sing? Who cares? Everyone loves sex tapes!

PAMELA ANDERSON

Baywatch Babe Pamela Anderson, 39, and then Rocker Hubby Tommy Lee, 44, are perhaps the founders of the "sex tape publicity stunt." Although the couple denied releasing the infamous Pam and Tommy honeymoon porno, their ebbing stardom skyrocketed once more after the tape, which sold an estimated 600,000 copies, was allegedly stolen from their home and released to the public. The couple sued Internet Entertainment Group for copyright infringement in order to get in on the profit, but the judge ruled against them stating that Pam and Tommy gave up their rights when they agreed to let IEG webcast footage from the tape. The 76 minute home video features Pam confessing her love to Tommy in every other sentence and in every kind of way while Tommy repeatedly and enthusiastically exclaims that everything is "rockin'." Since the tape's release in 1998, both Pam and Tommy have enjoyed an increased amount of time in the limelight.

GENA LEE NOLIN

Pamela Anderson is not the only Baywatch babe to grace the porn screen with her banging body and skillful sexual prowess. Gena Lee Nolin, 34, popped onto the scene herself, giving a whole new definition to the term "boob tube." In the late 90s, just after one of several breast surgeries, Gena and then-husband, Greg Fahlman, 45, starred in their very own home video. The video begins with Fahlman's cheesy narration as he films his wife. During this introductory dialogue, he candidly refers to himself as "daddy" as he directs Gena to take her bra off. She appropriately replies to his demands in a baby-talk voice, explaining that her breasts are still a little sore, but then willingly complies. The video goes on like this for a few minutes until Fahlman joins Gena on the opposite side of the camera, at which point Gena orally pleases her husband and shows that she can match any K-nine's ability to do it doggy-style. As is the norm for celebrity sex tapes, it is still a mystery as to how the video made it's way to the Internet, although it has been speculated that Fahlman's ex-wife may have had something to do with it. Unsurprisingly, Gena, who has always tried to walk in the footsteps of former co-star, Pam, was not angered by the tape's release, according to one of her reps. But alas, the poor girl was once again shadowed by Pam's popularity. Gena's tape didn't enjoy nearly as much fanfare or media attention after its Internet debut.

PARIS HILTON

If Pam and Tommy are the founders of the sex tape publicity stunt, then Paris Hilton, 25, is the queen. No one quite knows what Paris is really famous for, but her film debut in One Night in Paris would probably be everyone's first guess. Talk about sexing your way to stardom, the virtually unknown celeb turned became a household name after this major production made it's way to every adult video store and online site in the industry. It started in 2000 when Paris, who was only 19 at the time, and then boyfriend, Rick Salomon, 38, decided to make a video of themselves doing the horizontal hula. In 2003, long after the couple split, the tape began its circulation and the lawsuits began to fly. Paris sued a Panama-based Internet company for distributing the tape. Salomon sued Paris and her family for defamation because they slandered his "good" name. He also sued adult entertainment provider Marvad for copyright infringement and invasion of privacy because he claims that he never authorized the sale of the tape. Marvad, in turn, sued David Thrasher, who sold the tape to them and claims that Salomon gave it to him to sell. After Salomon started distributing the tape himself, he was sued by Paris. Sound confusing? It is. Only one thing is certain in everyone's minds—because of the tape Paris would, and did, receive much higher ratings for her upcoming reality sitcom, The Simple Life.

NICOLE NARAIN

Hollywood's hottest females are not the only ones playing victim to sex tape scandals. Celebrity bad boy and notorious womanizer, Colin Farrell, 30, also cried lawsuit when his heated, home video surfaced last year. The video, which Colin made with former girlfriend and Playboy Playmate Nicole Narain, 32, is a 14-minute look into the couple's more intimate relationship. The video starts with the ever-popular sex tape head game in which Nicole shows her innate ability to hold her breath for long periods of time. Afterwards, Colin and Nicole practice their flexibility with a variety of positions that the Palates teachers could learn from. The most famous line of the video comes, along with Colin, at the end when he pans the camera to Nicole's cat and tells her "Baby, you have the most beautiful pussy." Who knew that Colin could be so clever? When the couple parted ways, they agreed that the tape remain private. Nicole allegedly had other plans, however. According to the lawsuit, Nicole attempted to sell the tape to an Internet porn business in order to capitalize on Colin's celebrity status, but the judge restrained the tape from selling, showing or distributing because of the unlawfulness to exploit a videotape without the consent of both parties. As always, the tape somehow made it way to the Internet despite the opposition. Even Nicole showed her outrage at the website dirtycolin.com, which displayed the video, because this time she would lose her chance to profit from the deal.

DUSTIN DIAMOND

Dustin Diamond, 29, better known as "Screech," the lovable nerd from the teenage sitcom Saved by the Bell, is perhaps the most recent—and surprising—sex tape celebrity. The tape, which has not yet been released in its entirety, features Dustin and, not one, but two females (neither of which is his girlfriend) getting frisky in a hotel room four years ago. The 40-minute tape begins with Dustin holding the camera and narrating what will happen. It ends with the very bold and very graphic sex move known as the "Dirty Sanchez," which involves bodily excretions and a painted mustache. This very daring and shocking move was the main reason for the clever naming of the film, Saved by the Smell. Dustin's sex tape could not have surfaced at a better time for the former child star, who just months earlier was selling t-shirts on the Internet in a failed attempt to save his house. Dustin has been supporting himself through stand-up comedy since the end of Saved by the Bell, but apparently it hasn't been enough to pay the bills. Dustin's manager, Roger Paul, is openly happy about the tape's release because he claims it will help Dustin escape the Screech typecast that he has been trying to avoid. Although Dustin refutes that he had any prior knowledge that the tape would surface or that he condones the tape in any way, he has decided not to try to ban the tape, but to profit from it instead. Could a name change (Dusty Sanchez?) be next?

Madonnas, Whores and The Girls Next Door in the Films of Almodovar

Pedro Almodovar is a man in love...with soft bodies, high heels, and high drama. In other words, everything that makes up that glorious species we call woman. Spain has a long-standing tradition of film directors from Luis Bunuel to Jess Franco (no relation to that pesky, movie-hating dictator) who celebrated female sexuality in a fecund fury of religion and sacrilege, sex and sorrow. But no one has built a reputation for pulse-pounding perversity like Almodovar. Dubbed by Esquire magazine the "Vagina Virtuoso," Almodovar brings to the screen some of cinema's most unconventional love stories, and some of the spiciest female flesh.

Almodovar was born in the impoverished Spanish region of La Mancha. Pedro fled to Madrid at the earliest opportunity, but his desire to make movies was hampered by Franco's official state policy of "no fun, no sex—not in Spain." By saving money from jobs, Almodovar finally purchased a Super-8 camera. Young Pedro's films were sensations on Spain's underground film scene and he was eventually instrumental in the growing Spanish avant-garde art movement—Madrilène, following Franco's fall from power. (And not entirely inconsequential in his development of his super kitsch style was his side career as one half of a punk/glam/camp parody singing duo.)

Once Almodovar got to make feature films, the decadence of his character really got to shine. There is no film that mixes sex and death in that dark and distinctly Spanish sort of way (they did have the Inquisition after all) than Matador (1986). It may have been the French who dubbed an orgasm "the little death," but this tale of a Spanish killer of bulls, who turns his sexual attention toward the killing of broads that takes this idea further. Matador introduces Diego, an over-the-hill bullfighter who we meet sitting around on a lazy Sunday watching a snuff film. He and his to cut out some kink to get the film down to an R rating (it's NC-17). Another vixen from that prurient peninsula, Victoria Abril, plays a junky porn star who is being held twisted lover Maria, the gorgeous spicy dish Assumpta Serna, get their rocks off by sinking the knife into all types of pretty ladies. In typical Almodovar style, we are then introduced to Angel, a young, strapping bullfighter sexually crippled by his religious nut job of a mother played by a then-study Antonio Banderas. When Angel can't even get it together to rape Eva (Eva Cobo), the film's obligatory pert young mistress—and can't manage to get arrested, he confesses to all of the gruesome couples' murder instead. Eva and Assumpta heat up this dark comedy with all manner of Iberian intercourse on screen.

Sex and death stick around as quite a theme for this Spanish auteur. This time, with an even kinkier twist. Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down! (1990) made major waves stateside when Almodovar refused captive by an escaped mental patient played by Banderas. If this isn't the start of a fairy tale romance, I don't know what is! Banderas decides the best way to tug at Vicki's heartstrings is to make sure she stays all tied up - literally. He binds her to the bed and has his way with her. The film contains one of cinema's most unconventional nude scenes wherein a curious plastic diver in the bathtub explores Vicki's box of treasure.

When Almodovar shifts his gears from the ridiculous to the sublime, he never sacrifices the skin. My personal favorite of his films, Live Flesh (1998) offers the marvelous meat of Francesca Neri, who appears as a favorite archetype of Almodovar, a cracked out whore, whose life is saved by a hunky cop (Javier Bardem) who is shot instead of her in a gunfight. Of course, once they marry Fran transforms into the perfect little housewife cheerfully accompanying her husband to wheelchair basketball games. Although her husband does his best to get Francesca's juices flowing, once the bad boy who was framed for shooting him gets out of prison and rolls into town, trouble ensues. Since the cop's gun isn't firing, it's the bad guy's pistol that Francesca wants. This frisky flick certainly earns its title with eyefuls of those Neri nips—some amazing flesh to feast on. Some of the most seductive and simmering sex of any Almodovar film is in Live Flesh.

In the view of critics, Almodovar's films have just gotten better with works like All About My Mother (1999) and Bad Education (2004), a camp drama about pedophilic priests and transsexuals based on his own experiences growing up in Spanish Catholic school, being heaped with praise. But Pedro always stays true to form delivering one of the unconventionally sexy films in his oeuvre, Talk To Her (2002). A great many men find the prospect of a having a woman who will never nag you and never say no intriguing. Pedro takes it to a new level. He made a film about women in comas and the men who love them. Two men, a journalist and a nurse, meet in a hospital. The journalist's girlfriend, a female bullfighter was gored and lies in a coma. Next to her is a beautiful, but unconscious dancer, the object of affection of the nurse. They dress them up and keep their ladies company. A strange affair indeed, with plenty of the lissome body of Lenor Watling as she is primped, pampered and fucked by the horny male nurse. But Almodovar wouldn't leave us that high and dry. Talk to Her offers one of the most peculiar fantasy scenes that features a fresh outta Sex and Lucia (2001) Paz Vega. Miss Vega has the curious distinction of being circumnavigated by a tiny little man who runs around her naked body, over the landscape of her nipples and into her comparatively massive (well, compared to him) pussy.

If there is one thing that rules how Almodovar navigates the sexy scenes of his films, it's Cruz control.

(2006): "Penelope's cleavage is one of the visual attractions of the film. I'm a gay man, but I became hooked on Penelope's tits." You and us both Pedro! And although he hadn't had sex with a woman in 22 years, "With Penelope I felt again this desire! I was very horny with her. So I was completely hooked by her body and I took it like a kind of energy to show her as a sexual presence in the film." Seems that Volver will be one to watch for.

On and off screen Pedro Almodovar has a magic touch with women. The bad girls, the whore, saints and sinners—through his camera's lens he brings to the screen the most sensual live flesh.

Artist Sam Neill's moist models prance their well-proportioned parts through the Australian Outback—much to the chagrin priest Hugh Grant. Elle and her delightful double-Dundees would have any man of faith renouncing his vow of chas-titty.

BONER'S OD-ASS-EY: In Sirens, MacPherson's marvelous milk-duds had us pining to scuttle her hull and drench her deck. We'll need to have our man-mast tongue-tied so we don't toss our car-goo into her murky-muff depths .

For the rest of us, it was her skin-sational showing in 21 Grams (2003, this page) and Mulholland Drive (2001, opposite page) that had us pulling out our plump-primate poker!

CURIOUS GORGE: Naomi's nourishing nipples fed the great ape's ample appetite as his gluttonous lust for this often bare-chested beauty would prove to be his downfall. He's not the only one who'd like to fill Naomi with their Kong-dong!

ERICA DURANCE

BORN: June 21, 1978, Calgary, Canada

SEXY SIGHTINGS: Although she's only attacked by the horrific plot of The Butterfly Effect 2 (2006, top right) Erica was attacked nonetheless. Thankfully there was a steamy sex scene that allowed Erica to show off her own flapping wings!

FACT: Erica is a household name thanks to her role on Smallville (below), even though there's nothing small about those curves.

SEXUAL IN-DURANCE: Erica's greatest skin-flashing scene come courtesy of the teen-targeted flick House of the Dead (2003, this page and opposite right), which may just be the only zombie-rave movie you'll ever need.
